

HEROES ON THE FRONTLINE

June 19, 2020

Welcome to our Heroes on the Frontline page! No matter what happens in this world, our men and women in the waste and recycling industry are essential workers to keep things going. This section recognizes some of our waste and recycling frontline heroes from across the U.S. who risk their lives every day in this great industry to provide these important services.

Kenneth Foy, Leadpoint

When he needed a second chance, Kenneth Foy found one in the recycling industry. Leadpoint Business Services hired him as a sorter in a Seattle MRF and in a short time, became a back-up Line Lead. According to his manager, Kenneth always excelled, never complained, just put his head down and went to work. "He has always shown great leadership skills," his manager says.

What drives Kenneth to work so hard in this difficult job? "I've always been a hard worker since I started my first job when I was 16," Kenneth said. "The thing that drives me the most is that I don't like to fail! I believe that every man and woman should work hard and do the best they can."

"Working hard allows me to achieve all my goals. It doesn't matter what your job is or how much you get paid. If you work hard and do your best, you can do anything and overcome any challenges life has to offer."
